

NYS Medical Schools will be flexible in their post-COVID-19 admissions processes

Joint Statement on Behalf of the Associated Medical Schools of New York

The Associated Medical Schools of New York (AMSNY) have been at the forefront of our state's extraordinary response to the COVID-19 pandemic. Our faculty, staff, students, and affiliated hospitals have risen to this occasion with true heroism. In addition, many of our schools graduated our fourth year students early so they could join in the fight with their new credentials.

Although the pandemic has required a number of changes in medical student education, our schools are committed to continuing to provide outstanding experiences to our current and future students. Our schools are also being flexible in the way we evaluate applicants, whether it be a delay in MCAT scores or the recognition that some required courses may have been subject to pass-fail grading or presented in an on-line learning format, and in terms of how travel constraints may limit on-site interviews and campus visits.

We encourage all prospective applicants to consider the virtue and satisfaction of helping people in their times of greatest need.

For details about admission requirements to specific schools, please see their individual websites.